“ Since I was about 9 years old and up until my teen years, Billie and Ernie took my brother and I to church every Sunday; the same church her funeral service will be held. I was taught how to dress for Sunday service, how to present my best in God's house, and how to behave like a lady. My grandparents had a routine every Sunday that rarely changed. I can still see them drinking morning coffee while reading the newspaper and keeping up with the news on the little TV in the kitchen. I remember toast and freezer jam that she made and a glass of milk with ice. When we spent the night on Saturday night, I remember my grandma setting her hair in pin curls on the "davenport" and my grandpa would sit in the recliner as they watched "Dallas" on the old console TV. Many Thanksgivings were spent around the large table in their dining room, surrounded by pictures of all her loved ones and various items that held special memories. There were some very good times and equally rough ones too. Forgiveness is a powerful thing as is love, grace, prayer, and faith.

Billie was not my blood relative, as I was adopted. You'd never know it though. I was accepted and loved as part of their family. She was my grandma. She was a Texas woman through and through. She made the best pecan pie and Texas sheetcake on this Earth! She taught me good habits and routine, even if I didn't master it outside her home. She did her best to be there for everyone. I'll miss her calling me Jenny with her southern accent that never really went away.

Ernie and Billie are together now.
