“ I first met Dave & Anna in 1992, can't remember where or how, but we were avid followers of Durk Pearson & Sandy Shaw of "Life Extension" fame, it was like a second bible for both of us. Seemed liked we talked for hours, and every weekend thereafter that I could make it out to their store. I was then and still am a true believer in the Gospel according to Dave when it came to "scientific" nutrition, not the junk science preached at your typical nutrition store. Whether he was pontificating on the radio show or in the store, Dave's parables were legendary. He could take the most complex workings of micro-nutrients and biochemistry, and craft an analogy that made it understandable whether his audience was 18 or 98. I felt like I was a nutrition nerd, but Dave made it cool. I pitched in whenever I thought I could bring something new and interesting to their business, and they indulged my efforts on many occasions. Dave & Anna helped so many friends and family members of mine with their invaluable advice. In fact, many doctors have been quite surprised at my mothers internal health, and we've had to chalk it up to Vitacel 7. So imagine my surprise when Dave introduced us to it's creator, Dr. Koch, who turned out to be the husband of my Cub Scout den mother from 30 years prior! That's what my friendship with Dave was like, a constant stream of surprises and happy coincidences, the very things that make a friendship special. I left Portland in 2001 after 9/11, and have been stationed overseas since 2004, so I hadn't kept in touch with Dave & Anna for many years. I reached out a few times, but I'd isolated myself for the most part because of the type of work I did in the Air Force. Still in the UK, something happened in my life recently that led me to learn of Dave's passing. Words can't express the sense of loss, I had been looking forward to working with him again when I return to the States. Though no longer an option, he continues to inspire me and my desire to impact just a fraction of the lives that he has touched over his time on this Earth. My deepest sympathies go out to Anna and their families, Chris V.
