“ Keri,

Back in middle school and our early high school days, you were my best friend. We spent almost every day together—walking all over the neighborhood, sneaking cigarettes we were way too young to be smoking, and listening to old rock like it was the soundtrack to our lives.

You were wild, funny, and full of energy. I really loved you back then, even if I never said it out loud. We drifted apart as we got older, and I always thought there'd be more time to reconnect.

I'm grateful for the memories we made. You'll always have a piece of my heart.

Rest easy

“Karolyn Mae Blomdahl is your name. You were first a daughter, a sister, a granddaughter, a niece, a cousin and finally a mom to 2 wonderful children.

We will always keep you in mind. Always remembering.

You loved jokes, riddles, pranks, funky socks, clothes, and hoarded shoes like no one's business. Shoes to match this, shoes to match that.

You loved taking care of those in need. You had countless friends that you helped to ease their way along their final journeys. This week we were all by your side easing your way on your final journey.

*You loved music and just so you know we put together one hell of a play list for you. The doctors were still talking about it tonight. We started your play list with "Sound of Silence" by Disturbed and finished with "I've no more f*^&% to give" by Thomas Benjamin (I warned the staff before the last one played, they all cracked up and thought it was great).*

I tried to think of a poem or song that fit you but had no luck. There isn't just one thing that speaks to who you were. You were my hell on wheels and I often think back to the day you were going to run away to Walla Walla Washington to pick onions and giggle to myself. You were unique, happy, feisty, and everything in between all rolled together.

I look around the house and yard (okay, and garage that's overflowing with your clothes and shoes), everywhere is a touch of you, a piece of you.

I know that Kandice was there to greet you with one of her great big bear hugs. I can hear you girls cracking each other up already.

Granny James was there to greet you with one of her famous granny pinches, followed by hugs from all those who had gone on before you and those you met along the way.

Our hearts are broken as you left us all too soon. Yes, we will go on, not the same but different, always remembering you. The joy, the laughs, the music, missing you.

I miss you. God speed my daughter. I love you to the moon and back. Love, mom. XOXOXOXO
