“ I had too short of a time to know Mc better known as Micky to some. We spent hours driving together and during that time I learned to love him. He was an intelligent caring and witty fellow. He would frequently flatter me. Though his flattery was sincere I felt not worthy of it. He passed too soon for me to get to know the man as I would like, but enough to know that he was an intelligible sincere individual. He endured extreme pain toward the end with no complaint as well as some of the indignities illness bestows upon one. To understand this one would have to know him well as he hid his suffering well. He was of a positive nature keeping a good stature, humor and demeanor in his last days despite what he was suffering. His faith in God never wavered. He was a supportive person and I learned enough about him that made me want to know him more. During our conversation the most important thing to him I learned was his family. He was concerned about them and worried they did not know how much he loved and cared for them. I felt he was a man with clear vision and insight. I only regret that few eyes will read this and know him as I had seen him. He truly deserves to be honored. I know that no man is faultless but to me certainly his must have been few. Never was any displayed to me.
